Verdict of the Lords.

Lionel Cranfield, Duke of Dorset, Lord President of the Council—Guilty, upon my honour.

Then the Lord High Steward, laying his right hand upon his breast, said—

My lords, I am of opinion that Simon, Lord Lovat, is guilty of the high treason whereof he stands impeached, upon my honour.

LORD HIGH STEWARD—My lords, there are 117 of your lordships present, and you have unanimously found that Simon, Lord Lovat, is guilty of the high treason whereof he stands impeached. Is it your lordships' pleasure that he should be brought to the bar and acquainted therewith? Verdict

LORDS—Ay, Ay.

Proclamation was made for silence, and another proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the prisoner to the bar, which was done in the same order as before, and then proclamation was again made for silence as usual.

LORD HIGH STEWARD—Simon, Lord Lovat, the lords have considered the charge of high treason which has been brought against you by the House of Commons. They have considered the evidence, and all that has been offered to maintain the charge. They have also considered everything that has been alleged in your lordship's defence; and, upon the whole matter, their lordships have unanimously found that you are guilty of the high treason whereof you stand impeached.

LORD PRESIDENT—My lords, I move your lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

LORD HIGH STEWARD—Is it your lordships' pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

LORDS—Ay, ay.

The House was accordingly adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament, and the lords and others returned in the same order as before.

And the House, being resumed in the Chamber of Parliament, Ordered that this House will proceed further, in order to the giving of judgment against Simon, Lord Lovat, to-morrow at eleven of the clock in the forenoon in Westminster Hall, and a message was sent to the House of Commons by the former messengers to acquaint them therewith; ordered that the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his deputy, do take back Simon, Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the bar of this House in Westminster Hall to-morrow at eleven of the clock in the forenoon.
